Schwerpunkt; die eigenthümliche, spezifische — der Körper, the specific gravity of bodies; die eigenthümlichen —n mehrerer Körper bestimmen, to determine, fix the specific gravities of several bodies; Gold hat eine größere —, als Blei, gold has a greater specific gravity than lead. Fig. Ein mit einem Gefühl von — verbundener Schmerz, a pain accompanied with a feeling of weight, of oppression; eine — im Kopfe, im Magen, in allen Gliedern, a heaviness, sense of weight in the head, stomach, in all the limbs; die — eines Verbrechens, einer Strafe, the heinousness, atrocity, gravity of a crime, rigour, severity of a punishment; die — eines Amtes, the heavy responsibility of an office or situation, it. the difficulties, embarrassments of an office; nach der — [fam.], extremely, infinitely, in a high degree. Syn. Schwere, Gewicht, Wucht. Schwer, Wichtig. Schwere and Gewicht are rendered manifest not only by motion, but also by pressure on the body, that opposes the central or centripetal force; Wucht is evident alone, properly speaking, by force or momentum. Bodies differing from each other as to Gewicht [weight or specific gravity] fall with equal velocity in a vacuum, and therefore are of the same absolute Schwere [absolute gravity]. Hence it appears that Schwere is heaviness or gravity, Gewicht weight and Bucht ponderousness, ponderance. In a figurative sense that, which is schwer [heavy] requires much force or power, and that, which is wichtig [weighty] produces great effects, is effective. It is eine schwere Frage [a difficult, grave question], what constitution or form of government may be the best, but it is wichtig [important, momentous], that the government be carried on as it ought to be.

Segnen [to bless] is principally distinguished from den Segen geben [to give the blessing or benediction] by this, that the former represents also the mere inward wish, the latter however expresses that wish by words or other signs. Thus the priest at the close of divine service gibt den Segen [gives the blessing &c.] to his congregation; he gives also the nuptial benediction at the altar &c.; einsegnen is to consecrate, likewise, to devote by a blessing or by invoking the grace of God, and thence children, after having made a confession of their faith, are eingesegnet [confirmed].

The act of directing the eyes to any object is expressed by ansehen [to look at], the ocular perception of that object by sehen [to see]. He, who wants to sehen [see] any thing properly, must ansehen [look at] it, and he, who anseht any thing within the scope of his vision, supposing his sight to be perfect, will also sehen [see] it. Ansehen without attention, is gaffen or angaffen, that is to gaze or stare stupidly, to gape at. The Gaffer [gaper, starrer, gazer] has his eyes wide open, without seeing distinctly, without intellectual expression, or without being exactly conscious of what he really is seeing. Angaffen differs from gaffen in its implying the particular direction of the eyes, for the latter is simply to gape, to stare about, but not at any one particular object, while the former is to gaze at any thing. Gucken expresses a part of the meaning of sehen, viz. that part denoting the direction of the eyes to the object, but implies besides the inquisitive approximation of the head towards the same. It is hence to peer, to peep, to look inquisitively. *Schiel*en is to squint, and blinzen is to blink accompanied with winking, that is, to blink and wink.

Selten, [derivation uncertain; perhaps allied to the Lat. sol-us] adj. and adv. seldom, rare, unfrequent. —er Gast, a rare guest; ein —es Tugendbeispiel, eine — Schönheit, a rare, singular, uncommon instance of virtue, a rare beauty; eine der —sten Wirkungen der Natur, one of the rarest operations of nature; ein —es Glück, an uncommon, a rare, singular piece of good fortune; —e Bücher, rare, scarce books; ein —es Kleinod, a rare, curious, precious jewel; —es Verdienst, —e Gaben, rare, extraordinary merit, qualities; —er, sehr —er Fall, rare, singular, almost unprecedented case; so was geschieht —, nicht —, such a thing happens seldom, not seldom; ich gehe — aufs Land, I seldom go into the country; das ist nichts —es, that is nothing uncommon, extraordinary, out of the way; das ist für mich etwas or [more usual, in fam. lang., abbreviated] was —es, that is something new for me; das ist was —es, daß Sie uns einmal besuchen, it is quite a rarity for you to come and see us, you seldom pay us a visit, favour us with a call or look in now-a-days. Syn. Selten, Seltsam. Selten is an attribute of any thing that is seldom found or possessed, it implies something which always has a certain value derived from the very fact of its being uncommon, and very often it produces admiration, pride or delight; it is therefore equivalent to rare, scarce; on the other hand seltsam is an epithet, that conveys the idea of something not only uncommon but likewise unusual, that differs from what our mind conceives to be true to the laws of nature, of sound reason, of universal custom, thereby exciting always surprise, very often risibility and perhaps contempt; hence it is appositely explained by strange, odd, or the familiar word queer; both words may be sometimes explained by singular or curious; if it makes us laugh or sneer, seltsam often answers to funny, droll.

Seltenheit, f. 1) [of any article &c.] rarity.
Dieser Zeug ist theuer wegen seiner —, this stuff is dear on account of its rarity, scarcity. 2) a rarity, an uncommon or a singular thing, a singularity, an infrequency. Es ist eine —, Rosen im Winter zu sehen, it's a rarity to see roses in winter; Ihr Besuch ist ja eine rechte —, your visit is indeed quite a rarity, it is quite an adventure now for us to have the pleasure of a pop visit from you; der — wegen, for the rarity of the thing; allerlei —en sammeln, to collect all sorts of rarities, curiosities; er ist ein großer Liebha-ber von —en, he is a great amateur of scarce things.

Seltsam, adj. and adv. [old sel t = saene = something seldom seen] 1) [old] V. Selten.
2) [sonderbar] strange, singular, out of the way, odd, eccentric, [fam. and low] rum, funny, curious. —e Gestalt, odd figure; —es Kleid, —e Musik, odd, queer dress, music; —e Sache, strange thing; —e Art sich zu kleiden, odd way of dressing one's self; — gekleidet, curiously dressed; es ist mir ein —er Zufall begegnet, a strange accident has befallen me; —e Meinungen, strange, odd, eccentric, paradoxical opinions; die —e Verschiedenheit der Meinungen, the surprising, odd difference or variety of opinions; ein —er Mensch, an odd man, a heteroclit; sich auf eine —e Art betragen, to behave in an odd, eccentric manner; das ist doch — [wunderbar]! but that is strange, odd, extraordinary. wonderful! Syn. Seltſam, unglaublich, Wunderlich, Wundersam, Wunderbar. All these words with the exception of unglaublich have reference to the object or subject itself, unglaublich [incredible] expresses our opinion or judgement upon the possibility or reality of the said object &c. Wunderlich [queer] refers merely to every action proceeding from our will or fancy, to every idea &c. that is repugnant to stern reason or sober judgement, it is therefore either singular, eccentric or whimsical. A capricious or fanciful man is wunderlich [singular, odd, whimsical], his actions are wunderlich [surprising, extraordinary], his ideas are wunderlich [eccentric, strange, fantastic]. Wundersam is wondrous, and wunderbar is wonderful. Seltſam is that which from being unusual or eccentric appears generally to be wrong or improper, it is therefore, strange, odd, queer, singular, curious. V. also Selten.

Seltſamkeit, f. 1) oddness, oddity, singularity. Die — der Moden, the oddity of the fashions; die — im Betragen, the queer-ness, eccentricity in one's conduct. 2) a rarity, curiosity, a singular thing; V. [the more usual word] Seltenheit.

Seufzen, [in low Sax. suften, in Dutch zuften, Goth. svogjan; appears allied to the Old-Sax. svagan, svogga = rōnen to resound] I. v. intr. to sigh. Vor Kummer, Liebe &c. —, to sigh through care, from or for love &c.; aus Herzensgrunde, in seinem Innern —, to sigh, to heave or fetch a deep sigh from the bottom of one's heart, to sigh id- ternally; in einem — den Tone, in a sighing tone, sighingly; über seine Sünden zu Gott —, to sigh, to groan over one's sins to God; über die unglücklichen Zeiten —, to sigh over, to bewail the misfortunes of the times; nach Einem —, to sigh after any one; [with poets] der Wind seufzet, the wind sighs. II. v. tr. [with poets] to sigh forth. Er seufzet Liebe, he sighs [forth his] love. III. v. refl. [to pro- duce by sighing] Sich zu einem Schatten — [in poetical style], to sigh one's self to a sha- dow, down to a ghost. Das —, sighing; er kann vor — nicht reden, he cannot speak for sighing. Syn. Seufzen, Aechzen, Stöh- nen. Seufzen [sighing] is produced as well by a deep and long-drawn inspiration, as by a strong expiration. Stöhnen and Aechzen are the strong expulsion of the breath attended with a painful sound. Seufzen is moreover the more subdued expression of a mental suffering. Aechzen shews the immediate presence of a pang or throe, and Stöhnen reveals the exhausting exertion of en- during suffering. The strict censor seufzet [sighs] over the corruption of the times. A patient ächzt [groans, utters a groan], when racked by a pain. A man ready to sink under a burden, one mortally wounded stöhnt. It seems therefore that ächzen is to groan acutely, and stöhnen to utter low, moaning or deep groans, to groan heavily or gas- pingly.

Seufzer, m. [-s, pl. -], dim. — chen, || — lein, n. [-s, pl. -] a sigh. —, lange — ausstoßen, to heave, fetch, take sighs, long- drawn sighs; einen tiefen — holen, aus- stoßen, to fetch, utter a deep, profound sigh; gebrochene —, broken sighs; ein zärtlicher, verliebter —, a tender or gentle, amorous sigh; sein Zustand preßte Jedem — aus, his condition extorted sighs from every one; seinen Schmerz in — n aushauchen, to exhale, exhaust, pass away, dissipate one's pain or grief in sighs; einen — unterdrücken, er- sticken, to suppress or restrain, to stifle or smother a sigh; den letzten — ausstoßen, to breath forth one's last sigh, to give up the ghost, [speaking serio-comically of certain ani-nials &c.] to make one's will.

Das —, V. Spaltung. Syn. Evatten, Trennen. In the first place one spaltet (cleaves, splits, rends asunder) only solid and tough or stiff bodies; one trennt (separates or parts) fluids, and amongst the solids also such as are pliant. The seas on our globe are getrennt (separated) by the main-land, but not gespalten; a great and continued heat on the other hand often spaltet (cracks or chaps) the ground. Then again, one spaltet (splits) that, which was intimately connected and bound together; one trennt (separates) that, which without being intimately connected, was considered as one whole the parts of which after the separation begin to exist as independent wholes.

Lasset nicht —en unter euch seyn (in Scripture), and that there be no divisions among you; — [in the church], schism. Syn. Spaltung, Trennung, Zerwürfniß. Disagreements among the members of a society are only mere Spaltungen [splits, divisions, differences, disunion, schism], so long as these members do not secede, and set up a separate society of their own; the moment this takes place, a complete Trennung [separation] follows. Even among the very early christians there were several Spaltungen [differences], but these Spaltungen were no Trennungen, since they still formed one congregation, one church as before, and did not give rise to a sect. When the Spaltung [breach of concord or unanimity] is accompanied with ill-will and hostile demonstrations, so as to lead to a breach of the previous good order, it is then a Zerwürfniß [a rupture, an open rupture].

Stämmeler, V. Stämmeler.

Stämmeln, [originally from stamm and from stemmen = anhalten; allied to the lec. stumra, to stumm] I. v. intr. to stammer; V. Stottern. Dieses Kind fängt an zu —, this child is beginning to stammer; dieser Mensch stammelt, this man stammers; mit —der Zunge Etwas sagen, to say any thing with a stammering tongue; ein —der, eine —de, a stammerer. II. v. tr. to stammer forth or out. Sein Gebet, seinen Dank —, to stammer forth one's prayer, to stammer out one's thanks; eine Entschuldigung —, to stammer out an apology or excuse. Das —, stammering. Syn stammeln, stottern, lassen. Stottern implies an interruption, a break, and then a repetition of words or syllables, accompanied by a painful feeling of exertion on the part of the person so speaking. It arises either from a natural defect, or from an unfortunate habit. The word is therefore identical with our to stutter; stammeln and lassen merely imply an imperfect utterance, without the accompanying defects of stottern. Thus for instance children lassen or stammeln, when their tongue as yet but imperfectly trained utters words only partially or incorrectly; stammeln is therefore almost the same as our to stammer; lassen is the stronger word of the two, expressing the higher degree, it therefore sometimes is equivalent to our verb to mutter, and in choice or poetical language may be rendered by to lisp.

The two former words are in every respect the same towards each other, that the English stick and staff are. V. Hirtenstab, Pilgerstab, Zauberstab, Wanderstab, Bettelstab, Marschallstab &c. Stab is thence the most exalted word of the two, but is then, especially in poetry, to be rendered very often by wand. Stecken is a small or thin Stöck, and is also a lower expression, Stöck being the usual term for a walking-stick; Stecken is therefore the English rod or switch. 2) a) [with printers] vignette, vinnet [from vigne = vine-stock]; b) [in botany] ascending caudex; it. — [= Stamm], stock, stalk, stem; eine Rose am —e, a rose on the stalk; ein — Mairan, a stock or head of marjoram; die alten Stöcke ausreißen, to pull up the old stocks or stalks, the stumps or stubs; ein schön —er —, a handsome stock, stem, a well-grown plant; der mittlere — [the part between the ascending and descending caudex], intermediate caudex, [in Scotch] breck; der abwärts steigende —, descending caudex; der — eines Baumes, stem, trunk, stump of a tree; die Stöcke ausroden, to root up the stumps. c) Fig. [in pop. lang.] Ueber — und Stein, über — und Block laufen, jagen, to run at full speed, helter-skelter, at full chevy, to scurry along, to run at full pelt, to tear along, to run at full burst, at a slap-up pace. Syn. Stöck, Stauden, Strauch, Busch. The Stauden, the Strauch and the Busch are woody or ligneous and send forth several stems from one common root. The Strauch however differs from Stauden in this, that its numerous little stems are so twisted and distorted, that they appear entangled, and the eye is baffled, when attempting to trace them out individually. Strauch is therefore the frutex or real shrub, while Stauden is more the shrub or low dwarf-tree. Now when such a Strauch is widely spread out, when it consists of numerous little stems, all of them proceeding from one root, growing in a tangle or maze, and when it at the same time has a great quantity of leaves, it is then called a Busch or bush. A Stöck is one single stem, that cannot also be woody, for there are Reckenstöcke, Leckstöcke as well as Rosenstöcke, they are however not woody; hence Stöck can only be rendered in English by Stöck, when the stem is herbaceous. 3) [embracing the ideas of length and breadth] V. Fenster—. 4) [conveying more the idea of bulk] Der — eines Ambosses, the stock of an anvil, der — [= Stumpf] eines Baumes, the stump; der — zum Almosen, the poor-box; [in architecture] der — einer Säule, Bildsäule, pedestal, die, foot, stylobate, aeroter; [with batters] Hut —, form, block; einen Hut über den — schlagen, to put a hat on the block; [in the mint] —, the square or die of the effigy, the dormant or under square; [with organ-builders] frame, pedestal of the pipes; [with turners] V. Docke; [with seal-engravers] stick, handle, holder; V. Schraub —, Daumen —; die Stöcke an den Schuhen [= die hölzernen Absätze], the wooden [high] heels on shoes [V. under Stöckenschuhe]; der — [in fulling-mills], the wooden trough [into which the set of pestles fall]; Einen in den — legen [formerly], to put, clap any one into the stocks; — [= Rumpf] eines Hemdes, body of a shirt or shift. 5) [something as it were stuck up, that is, something built] [with builders &c.] Der — or das —werk eines Hauses, the story of a house; er wohnt im ersten —e, er wohnt im zweiten —, he lives in or on the ground floor, [with others] on the first floor, he lives on the second floor, occupies the first story [which latter means generally the bel etage]; sie hat den vierten — inne, she occupies or has the fourth story; Haus von zwei, drei &c. —en or Stöcken, house of two, three &c. stories, house two-stories &c. high, a two-storied &c. house; im untersten —, on the ground floor. 6) [a mass of things stuck together, that is, of things happening to be together or consisting of constituent particles of a like nature] Ein — [with miners], block or lump of ore, a shode; liegender — [with miners], horizontal block, flat shode; ein — Vieh, stock of cattle [on a farm]; der — [at games of cards], stock; [with braziers, der Satz] set, lot, pile [pyramid of copper saucepans &c., which are of graduated sizes].
